

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

An inexpensive and disposable cooling device for relieving pain associated with hypodermic injection that can be used with any hypodermic syringe includes a body and a sterile cooling medium within the body. A removable cover closes the body and maintains the sterility of the cooling medium before use. The device can be used to simultaneously cool a number of injection sites, eliminating the additional time required to serially cool the multiple injection sites.